If you have ever played billiards or billiards, you may have wondered what the balls are made of. People have been playing variations of swimming pools and other sports signs since at least The 16th century. And while the game has changed dramatically over time, it wasn't until the 1920s that pool balls developed. Previously, beads are made of wood or ivory. Historians can't say for sure when the first game of billiards or pocket billiards was played. The documents describe a lawn game played by French nobility in the 1340s that was like a mixture of billiards and croquet. By the early 1700s, the game had evolved considerably, although the search for French and British nobility remained largely. The pool is now an indoor game played on the table, using stick sticks to knock balls in the pockets of the table. The earliest pool balls were made of wood, which was quite inexpensive to produce. But as Europeans began to colonize Africa and Asia, they developed a taste for exotic materials from foreign countries. Ivory from elephant tusks became popular among the upper classes of the 17th century. The ivorians, as they were sometimes called, were far more beautiful than wooden pool balls and far more exclusive, especially in the 17th century. But they weren't insudible. Ivory pool balls tended to be yellowed with age and tended to crack in humid climates if hit with excessive force. As the basin continued to grow in popularity during the first half of the 1800s, demand for tusks began to severely threaten elephant populations in Africa and Asia. In 1869, with the popularity of pool climbing along with the price of ivory, pool table maker Phelan and Collender decided to challenge their customers by offering $10,000 to anyone who could invent a ball of a pool other than ivory. The ad caught the eye of John Wesley Hyatt, Albany, N.Y., inventor hyatt combined camphor with alcohol and nitrocelulose, shaping it into a spherical form under extreme pressure. The finished product did not win the $10,000 Hyatt Prize, but its creation is considered one of the first synthetic plastics. Over the following years, he would continue to refine the pellets of celluloid billiard pellets, but he remained a poor substitute for ivory because he was nowhere near as durable. Worse, nitrocelulose was not a particularly stable substance, and in rare cases, according to Hyatt, the balls in the pool would explode by force. In 1907, American chemist Phelan Leo Baekeland invented a new plastic substance called Bakelite. Unlike The Hyatt's pool balls, balls made of Bakelite are durable, easy to produce, and did not carry the risk of blowing up the game. By the mid-1920s, most of the balls in the pool were made of Bakelite. Today's pool balls are usually made of acrylic or plastic resses, which are extremely durable and can be milled according to exact standards. Sources Guide to the game 8-Ball pool. Every shot in the eight-ball pool begins with players hitting the stick and scoring the ball into the second ball. If a player puts a ball in his pocket, it's called a scratch, and the opposing player puts the stick ball anywhere in the kitchen, or the first two diamonds on the table separating the ball from the shelf. Beads located inside the kitchen can not be hit with a scratch unless you hit a fence that is not inside the kitchen. After the player has put the ball in his pocket, that player now owns that kind of ball. Whether it's stripes or solids. The opposing player cannot hit the ball and collide it with the opponent's type of ball before hitting his own type of ball. Illegally pocket balls, such as the ball being pocketed off of stick balls hitting the opponent's ball first or if playerscratches, stay in the pocket. Legally pocket balls give the player who put him in the pocket another twist. At any time, players can ask each other where they intend to pocket the ball they are aiming for. If a player puts the ball in an unintended pocket, another turn is not approved. 8 ball is always the opposing ball until all players kind of ball is in the pocket, then special rules applyYou start playing 8-ball pool, first you have to rack all the balls together excluding cue ball, or the only ball that is all white. 1 ball must be on top, 8 balls in the middle, with solid paint and color in other corners. The rest doesn't matter. Select a player to break in any way you want. (the act of breaking means a player who gets to go first.) To break, the player can place the ball anywhere in the kitchen. which is between two diamond shapes on the sides of the table. When breaking, the player hits the ball into the rack and must drive at least 3 different balls into the rails of the table or pocket the ball. If these conditions are not met, the opposing player may choose to re-rack and break himself or allow the game to continue. At this stage of the game any player can try to pocket any ball, regardless of whether any balls are in the pocket during the break. The first person to put the ball in his pocket now possesses this type of ball (solids or stripes). Each player tries to pocket his set of balls until no one stays, but 8 balls. When a player shoots an 8 ball, he has to call the pocket he intends to run the ball into his pocket on March 8. If a player does it in the correct pocket they called, they're winning the game. If a player puts the ball in the wrong pocket, scratches or puts the ball in his pocket and scratches, that player loses the game. Game.
